Nebraska Joins $3.5M Settlement with Lenovo over Installation of Hacker-vulnerable Software on Laptop Computer

Attorney General Doug Peterson announced today that Nebraska has joined 31 other states in a settlement with technology company Lenovo (United States) Inc. to resolve allegations that the company violated state consumer protection laws by pre-installing software on laptop computers sold to Nebraska consumers that made consumers' personal information vulnerable to hackers.

In August 2014, North Carolina-based Lenovo began selling certain laptop computers that contained pre-installed ad software called VisualDiscovery, which was created by the company Superfish, Inc. VisualDiscovery purportedly operated as a shopping assistant by delivering pop-up ads to consumers of similar looking products sold by Superfish retail partners whenever a customer's mouse hovered over the image of a product on a shopping website. The states claim that VisualDiscovery displayed a one-time pop-up window the first time consumers visited a shopping website. Unless consumers affirmatively opted out, VisualDiscovery would be enabled on their computers.

The states alleged that VisualDiscovery operated by acting as a local proxy, or "man in the middle," that stood between the consumer's browser and all Internet websites the user visited, including encrypted sites. This technique allowed the software to see all of a user's sensitive personal information that was transmitted on the Internet. Consumer information, including sensitive communications with encrypted websites, would be collected and transmitted to Superfish, the states allege.

The states also alleged that VisualDiscovery created a security vulnerability that made consumers' information susceptible to hackers in certain situations. The states allege that Lenovo's failure to disclose the presence of VisualDiscovery on its computers, its failure to warn consumers that the software created a security vulnerability, and its inadequate opt-out procedure violated state consumer protection laws.

Lenovo stopped shipping laptops with VisualDiscovery preinstalled in February 2015, though the states allege that some laptops with the software were still being sold by various retail outlets as late as June 2015.

Nebraska will receive $59,145.45 from the settlement funds.

In addition to the monetary payment, the settlement requires Lenovo to change its consumer disclosures about pre-installed advertising software, to require a consumer's affirmative consent to using the software on their device and to provide a reasonable and effective means for consumers to opt-out, disable or remove the software. Lenovo is also required to implement and maintain a software security compliance program and must obtain initial and biennial assessments for the next 20 years from a qualified, independent, third-party professional that certifies the effectiveness and compliance with the security compliance program.

F. Lenovo further agrees to execute and deliver all authorizations, documents and instruments which are necessary to carry out the terms and conditions of this Agreement, whether required prior to, contemporaneous with or subsequent to the Effective Date of this Agreement, as defined herein.

There are no representations, arrangements, or understandings, oral or written, between the parties relating to the subject matter of this Agreement that are not fully expressed herein or attached hereto. Each party specifically warrants that this Agreement is executed without reliance upon any statement or representation by any other party hereto, except as expressly stated herein.

K. Lenovo agrees that this Agreement does not entitle it to seek or to obtain attorneys' fees as a prevailing party under any statute, regulation or rule, and Lenovo further waives any right to attorneys' fees that may arise under such statute, regulation or rule.

L. This Agreement shall not be construed to waive any claims of sovereign immunity the State of Nebraska may have in any action or proceeding.

M. Except as otherwise provided under law, this Agreement may only be enforced by the State of Nebraska, Lenovo and this Court. The Parties to this action may agree, in writing, through counsel, to an extension of any time period in this Agreement without a Court order.
